The New York weekly bank statement shows the following changes:

Loans, increase..... 2,130,000 egal tenders, increase...... 3,864,100 Circulation, decrease................. 369,000 The banks now hold $82,008,025 in excess of the requirements of the 25 per cent. rule. Total sales of stocks were 62,742 shares.

The publication of reports outlining the proposed plan of reorganization of the New York & New England Railroad Company not only caused a selling movement in the stock particularly affected, but depressed the entire list, with the exception of a fractional rally shortly before 11 'o'clock. The tendency of prices was downward from the opening to the close of business. The speculation was fairly active for a Saturday, but was principally confined to New England, Chicago Gas and Sugar, with St. Paul and General Electric less prominent in the transactions, and the rest of the list rather neglected. There was brisk selling of New England at the opening, the first sale being at a decline of % and then came an additional break of I per cent, which was followed by a recovery of 14, with a final reaction of 1/2, making the loss on the day 1 per cent. Reports of cutting rates and labor troubles in the West helped to uepress the market generally, but the fluc tuations were, as a rule, confined within narrow limits, the only shares which compared with yesterday's closing figures showing a loss of more than a fraction, being Pittsburg & Western preferred, which is down 2%, and Pittsburg, C., C. & St. L. preferred, 1%. The grangers show a decline of 1/801/2, and Missouri Pacific 7/3. In the final trading covering of short contracts caused a recovery of a small fraction in some of the more active shares, but the undertone at the close was heavy. During the week the speculation was irregular and unsettled, the trend of prices being, in the main, in the direction of lower prices. Some shares, however, recorded advances, notably Chicago Gas, 51/2; Consolidated Gas, 3%; Alton & Terre Haute, 6; Evansville & Terre Haute, 3; Sugar, 1, and Sugar preferred, 4. The chief declines are: St. Paul, Minneapolis & Man-Itoba, Rubber and Laclede Gas preferred,

The rallway and miscellaneous bond market was only moderately active, but was firm in tone until near the close, when, in sympathy with the share speculation, prices gave way slightly, the closing being about steady. The changes on the week are chiefly in the direction of higher values, but it is only in the usually inactive is sues that any material improvement has been made, notably Duluth & Manitoba firsts, 13; Peorla, Decatur & Evansville firsts, Evansyille division, 8; Peorla, Decatur & Evansville, main line firsts, 3%; Mexican International firsts, 6%; and Canton firsts and Omaha & St. Louis firsts, 3 per cent. Government bonds were steady. State bonds were dull. The following table, prepared by James E. Berry, Room 16, Board of Trade, shows the

LOCAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

Another Week of Disappointing Trade with Few Changes. It is already evident that the business of April on the wholesale streets is to fall considerably below that of April last, In prices there were few changes during the week. Irish potatoes, oranges and some descriptions of hog products were a little higher, but in staple groceries there were no changes. Eggs advanced 2 cents, but have again dropped back. Poultry is 1/2c lower. The leather and hide markets are active at unchanged prices. Hardware men and druggists report trade better than last month, but not what they would like to have it. On Commission row considerable has been doing. The supply of new tomatoes is improving, while the receipts of strawberries, which should now be quite heavy, are meager and much of the stock inferior. Clover seed is scarce and ad-

That depends. An author is one whose writings have been published, and usually success. The term is flexible, but it does not properly cover brief and unimportant con-to get into print. By rights it carries an idea of dignity and eminence. "The glory of a nation is its authors." Call yourself simply a writer; that sounds more modest.

Oats were very quiet throughout the entire session, with buyers fairly plentiful, but little stuff offered. There was no great activity in provisions. It Corresponds to Despotism, and Red Tape Dominates Everywhere. H. F. K., in New York World.

The French theory of liberty coincides exactly with the practice of Russian despotism. Everything and everybody are administered to death. Business as understood among American and English moneygetters is entirely unknown. Thousands of both races have attempted to introduce an enlightened system everywhere in France where the chances of gain seemed to invite. Everywhere the enterprises have failed. The French refuse to change old ways-even when it is made clear to them that the retention of trade is at stake. They see German companies taking away their maritime supremacy; they see Ger-man liners carrying away trade at Havre, Brest, Boulogne; they see English craft cutting them out along the Biscayan coast and in the Mediterranean-they refuse to abate one jot of the odious inquisitorial system that makes traffic impossible to men in a hurry. The line of magnificent vessels run by the Transatlantic Company come into Havre every week half empty, while English and German craft are laden down with merchandise delivered in France. but the company will not change a line of its harrassing conditions.

Everything is inquisitorial and annoying. It requires more formality to send a cablegram from Paris than it involves to make a will in the United States or England. As to banking, an American never attempts it here, unless he has a month's leisure; and the most remarkable phase of this is that the foreigners embarked in the business are quite as bad as the French themselves. It requires from a half hour to a full hour to get a check cashed, still longer to make a deposit, and I don't know how long to make a draft. From 12 until 2 o'clock not a bank in France is open for business. All the clerks go off to dejeuner. Indeed, all business is at a standstill between those hours. What mystifies the onlooker is how the country carries on the volume of business its annual statements show. There is not a discoverable branch of trade in which the personnel is not tenfold out of proportion with the needs of business, and each one in some way extorts a fee. The fee is not large, but its exaction takes precious time from the work in hand. If you think to escape its payment woe to the outcome of your affair! The evil is growing instead of diminishing, for ten years ago I do not remember its prevalence save in hotels and theaters. Now it is in every conceivable business relation. The French press never tires of holding the United States up as the horrible example of political, social and business dishonesty, but let anyone attempt the smallest or largest enterprise here and he will find the Yankee out-Yankeed with a persistence, adroitness and universality that fairly baffles me to give a name.

Suggested by Current Novels. Kate Coleman, in New York Sun. I have yet to hear from one able-mouthed champion of woman's freedom a passing our day, write books that are hilarlously impure, and I believe they revel in the writing of them. Women never do. They write them to make money and to estabish purity. Mrs. Helen Gardiner's excuse for what she calls imagination is the appaliing danger that the race encounters in the foolish division of it into two sexes. No one that I have ever heard of has been able to controvert her position-that if there was only one sex there wouldn't be any sex trouble.

DEATH AND THEOSOPHY.

Religious Views That Take Away the Dread of a Hereafter. New York Press.

In the midst of life we are in death. Out upon the shoreless sea, whence no voyager returns, the human heart may be rudely blown without warning. The homicidal wave which has rolled over this city within the past fortnight has swept out into the dark mystery of mysteries nine unprepared souls. How much more do men know of the present state of the souls of those nine than was known of the experience of the spiritual spark of the first slaughtered man back in the dim dawn of human history? The basal foundation of all abiding regions and of all moral philosophy that survives the scrutiny of the centuries is man's belief in the immortality of his soul. The mystery of death and immortality, judged by the rigid requirements of the materialists, may, perhaps, be said to be as great as it was at the death of Abel. But the application of human thought for five thousand years has resulted in the upbuilding of systems of religious philosophy that today satisfy the spiritual longings of 700,000 .-000 of people, each system explaining in a different way the soul's experience after the death of the body. From Asia, the birthplace of the race and the mother of mysticism, comes that christianized child of Brahamism. Theosophy, scarcely understood as yet, by even a minute fraction of that number which would pry into the screts of death. A fortnight since there took place in this city the funeral of a young woman, Miss Olsen, who was placed to rest in accordance with the views of Theosophists concerning death. According to Theosophists, every human being is a living soul, which always was and always will be, and which at times functions through a human body which it itself has built up to enable it to act in a material plane. By many this necessity of action in a physical plane is dreaded. It is as if the soul were thrown into a dungeonan idea held by Plato, as well as other mystics of ancient times, and present among the Buddhists and Brahmins of today, the Nirvana of the Buddhists being not annihilation, but a cessation of existence on material planes. Death removes the soul from its material confinement. Theosophists hold, as, in a way, did Henry Ward Beecher, that they should restrain their first inclination to mourn for a friend who dies, and should, instead, rejoice that his best portion gains by the physical death. Admissible grief is only that sorrow inseparable from parting, even if that parting be but for a short time. Theosophists hold that souls which function in bodies are free when the body is laid to rest at night, just as the musician in one meaning is free when he lays down his instrument. More than this: During the waking hours the soul has a considerable measure ci consciousness that is not em-

Therefore, the separation between living and dead is less than is ordinarily supposed. Such conceptions largely diminish the horrors of death. For disposing of the dead body most Theosophists favor cremation. The ordinary obections to interment that are advanced on sanitary grounds have weight with Theosophists. In addition, there is, they say, even after death, still a tie between the corpse and that which quit it, for that which quit it is not only the pure soul, but a covering of the soul less material than the gross body, though not unsubstantial. This covering has to disintegrate at equal rate with the corpse. The quick destruction of the body by fire expedites both of these disintegrations. Mme. Blavatsky, the high priestess of theosophy, directed that her body should be cremated. Her ashes were divided into three portions, one each for the Asiatic, European and American sections of the Theosophical Society. The American portion is in a marble urn at No.

ployed in the details of physical existence, but is more or less active in the unsubstantial realms, and is, in a way, in harmony with complete disembodied souls,

144 Madison avenue, in the charge of William Q. Judge. The body of Baron De Palm was cre-mated. The funeral was conducted at the Masonic Temple in this city by Colonel Olcott, president of the society since its foundation, in the presence of an assembly so large as to seem at one time to imperil its own safety. The ashes of Sattya, a Hindoo, who was cremated near this city, were scattered in midocean, on a stormy night, when heavy banks of clouds obscured the moon and the deck was deserted. A weird Hindoo chant, to the accompaniment of the pounding waves, consigned them to an unmarked grave.

No After-Dinner Speaker.

Detroit Free Press. It was a surly tramp, to whom the cook had given something to eat, and more than once while he was putting it away she feit like pouring a teakettleful of hot water down his neck, but the feeling of charity which prompted her to feed him restrained her from getting even with him. He got through after a while and was starting off without so much as a "thanks" or "good morning" or anything.

"Here," she said sharply, "haven't you got anything to say after as good a dinner as that?" "Naw," he retorted, "d'yer think I'm Chancy Depoo?" and what the cook said to him was more appropriate in its application than it would be for the columns of a public print.
